Aesthetic characteristics

Renovated flat in the historical centre of Prague. The original doors, windows and radiators are maintained and complemented with new elements such as the linoleum flooring or the kitchen. The decoration reflects the contrast between the old and new.

Architecture

Parallel kitchen.

While one of the kitchen's walls hosts the wall and base units, the wall situated directly in front hosts the tall units that go up to the ceiling and which integrate the oven, the fridge and the storage area. The incorporation of the profile in the tall units makes it possible to have a kitchen where the handles are hardly noticed.

The renovation on the flat permitted the kitchen, living room and dining room to be grouped together in one large and luminous space. The choice of the Umbra model, where the handle achieves it's most minimal expression, contributes in creating a suitable ambience for the fusion of these three rooms..

Highlights

The handle is reduced to the most minimum expression remaining practically hidden from sight. The Umbra's opening system is characterized by its discretion. Its secret: the handle is combined with a profile of exactly the same colour as the front of the kitchen, thus integrating itself perfectly..

The handle is reduced to the most minimum expression remaining practically hidden from sight. Thus there is a fusion of spaces: the kitchen, the dining and the living areas are joined in a ample space not used only for cooking.

Profiles in tall units

A handle that can hardly be seen.

The handle is reduced to a minimum expression remaining practically hidden from sight. The incorporation of the profile in the tall units makes it possible to have a kitchen where the handles are hardly noticed.

The tall units reach the ceiling and integrate the ovens, the fridge and the freezer as well as ample spaces for storing goods. To the ceiling units is one way of making the most of all the space available. The modules on top of the tall units have the Mechanic Assisted Opening System incorporated in the door (SAA-M), which is more comfortable when the units are over a certain height.

The laminated worktop

Until recently, wood had been reserved for areas without much daily use, but new treatments have converted this material into another work surface option.

The Medium Walnut laminated worktop gives warmth to the kitchen and combines perfectly with the table and chairs in the dining area.
